

Morgan D. Kirby, Ph.D.

Department of Journalism

Dr. Morgan D. Kirby is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Journalism at Texas Southern University—where she teaches public relations and advertising courses for both undergraduate and graduate students. She holds a Ph.D. in Communication, Culture and Media Studies from Howard University. Her research interests include public relations, strategic communication, social justice and change, popular culture, black representation in media and historically black colleges and universities.

Dr. Kirby is a native of Fayetteville, N.C. and after graduating from high school, she attended Hampton University and received a bachelor's degree in Public Relations. She also earned a master's degree in Government from Regent University in VA Beach, VA. Dr. Kirby is a public relations researcher and practitioner. She has experience working in political communication, strategic communication, media relations, community relations, and editing for printed publication.